INTRODUCTION

Twenty-one hundred and fifty-two Philadelphia portraits and views are brought together in this volume: Fifteen hundred and sixty classified uniform portraits of Philadelphians; a half hundred historic prints and nearly six hundred historical and photographic views, including one hundred and sixty-eight city and country homes. It is hoped they will interest the present generation and be of permanent bibliographical and historical value.

PHILADELPHIA: THE AMERICAN CITY

AN HISTORICAL AND DESCRIPTIVE SKETCH BY TALCOTT WILLIAMS

Philadelphia was the first of American cities to reach the permanent character which it was to keep for all time. For cities, like men, have their youth and their maturity, their temperament and their character, their careers and their destiny, their triumphs and their failings, those who hate and those who love. There has been no moment for 3,000 years when Damascus has not been rapt among its waters and sat in its tender green. The Roman camp about which the Parisi gathered differed no whit in the letters of Julian a millennium and a half ago from Paris in the letters of Balzac. There has been no moment for 3,000 years when Singan-fu has not held its solitary state in its narrow, walling mountain, a city of dignities and ranked palaces, be they empty, as for centuries past, or full, as in the last twelvemonth.

Our American cities come but late to their historic right. No one confounds the Boston of Faneuil Hall and the Common with the Boston of the Public Library and of open squares, thronged streets and brilliant and builded ways. The New York of Wall Street and the Battery is not the imperial city which queens it over a harbor full of gathered boroughs. Even in Chicago, they draw their sharp line between the city "before the fire," frame, low, squalid, and the growing splendors which have piled the business town of the modern Babel on the trembling morass. These all change. Philadelphia remains stanch and American from its start, through all its spreading thousands between the rivers and beyond.

This city had no frontier youth. It had won its charter twenty years after the first house had been built on its city site and the gap between the first Swede settlement and a Mayor and Burgesses dealing with all city evils was briefer than for any other of our Atlantic municipalities. It grew like a mushroom, 2,500 houses in a score of years. No other colonial city saw the like. The thin line of gabled houses, perched on the steep river bank in 1720, up which Franklin climbed a few years later, had bloomed into towers and steeples, the State House and Christ Church, the square residences of South England and the double-gabled roofs of the Fairmount before he had reached middle life.

Its very colonial days alone of our early cities drew together all the fore-runners of national greatness. It had at its western gate the wheat-fields of Lancaster and first sent out corn to feed other lands. On its very soil the pine and oak, cypress and chestnut met, and on the Delaware began the larger American shipbuilding on sites where the greater yards of the future were to launch the warships of Czar and Mikado with the serried fleets of the Republic. It had its Germantown when all the other colonies were English and insular, and all the arts of Central Europe were brought here by the artificers of the Rhine. Here tanning began, and here shoes were earliest made for more than local use, the wool trade began here and here the lesser arts of life. Here beer was first brewed, here the printing-press began in more than one tongue. Iron was first made about it, and arms and the Conestoga wagon—the wain of Central Europe—began Western trade and prefigured the Philadelphia locomotive, whose voice has gone through the earth and the sound thereof, from the Southern to the Northern seas.

When the Revolution came the city was compact of all the strands of later national life. Foreign tongues were spoken in its streets and the stream of its life was enriched by German and Moravian, by Huguenot and by Spanish Jew, the long-lineaged aristocrat of his race, whose descent makes all other seem of yesterday. It was the natural center of the colonies, the keystone of their arch. Here were the great bankers, Morris and the rest. In their banking parlors the debts of the infant Republic were funded, for European financiers knew no other American credits. Its State House was the one imposing secular building of the Thirteen Colonies, and it remains high two centuries

WILLIAM PENN'S SUPPOSED TREATY WITH THE INDIANS AT SHACKAMAXON (NOW KENSINGTON), NOVEMBER 30, 1682

Though there is doubt whether Penn made the particular treaty as commemorated in Benj. West's painting, after which the engraving is made, the chronicles in the affirmative say that Penn wore on that occasion a sky-blue suit, and that Chief Tammany (Tammany) conveyed lands to him, giving as a token of friendship a bundle of deerkins. The site of the treaty is marked by a monument

After a view made by George Heip, by direction of Nicholas Scull, Surveyor General, Province of Pennsylvania. The city occupied a strip of land along the river, in which the islands, subsequently removed, were then only shoals. The battery with 27 cannons, on the site of the old Navy Yard, was built with funds raised by lottery by Franklin and other citizens after it was built, a model of colonial dignity, grace and effective simplicity. Cannon could be cast at Valley Forge, and only there. Artificers knew here the secret of powder-making. The royal post-office was established in this city by Franklin, and all the threads of correspondence and communication gathered in the office over which he presided and whose mails passed without a break—the one royal department of State which did—from Crown to Republic, and proved of incalculable service to the new cause, which used the old expresses and mail routes.

So it came to pass that here the first Continental Congress met in Carpenters' Hall. Independence Hall gained its name from the great document it saw signed, and later sheltered a body greater and charged with a more difficult task than even independence, the Federal Constitutional Convention, which raised the pillars of constitutional liberty and rounded the arch of "a more perfect Union." Philadelphia in no small sense both financed and fought the War of the Revolution. Its brief occupation by Howe left nothing but the line of redoubts along Spring Garden street, and the social tradition of the Meschianza, for this city shares with historic Charleston an organized social life which antedates independence. This city was the center of the Confederation. Congress sat here. From here commissions were issued, and here foreign negotiations were conducted. The first frigates of the "Alliance" were built here, and in the Delaware an American navy, but in American waters, was launched when John Paul Jones was showing how American sailors could sail and fight French ships. For a season, the city was the capital of the United States. In this city the Supreme Court began its work and the departments were organized. Foreign ministers were first received at the modest State Department on a side street in a narrow two-story house, and the Republic first saw its effigy coined on money from its own mint, just housed in a new and stately pile, which continues an ancient tradition. Washington was President here, and Adams; and Franklin, the most famous American of his day, saw his last, full years of honor, in the city whose open field had seen him begin kite-flying in electrical enterprises, a pursuit still practiced.

A century ago this city was great because great men had walked its streets. William Bradford had begun the journalism of the Middle States and vindicated its freedom in the defense of a great libel suit. The press of this city, which Franklin distinguished and to which Jefferson contributed, has expanded since into a daily press, which has through a century reflected the characteristic qualities of the life of Philadelphia. The success of "Godey's," early in the century just over, exceeded later by "The Ladies' Home Journal."

More than one chapter of American life was first opened in the early days of this city. John Bartram, in the stone house still standing, wrote the first chapters in American botany; and David Rittenhouse made the first astronomical instrument, observation entry and calculation on American soil. John Godfrey invented the sextant. The American Philosophical Society was the first scientific society in the land, and still meets in the hall Franklin secured for it, and the president each fortnight sits in Franklin's chair. The Philadelphia Library was the first library—remains one of the important—and its two buildings, on Juniper and on Christian streets, stand in a city which maintains its ancient tradition by having to-day in its Free City Library the largest circulation of any free library anywhere, larger per capita than in any other city. Benjamin West began American art in this city, and when he painted "Penn's Treaty" opened a new chapter in landscape art by first giving each tree its leaf and form, breaking away from earlier convention, as he had in the costumes of his heroes. Rush modeled here the first American statue, and Stuart and Sully began the high tradition of American portraiture, which the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, the oldest academy and art school, has zealously and successfully continued. Charles Brockden Brown opened American fiction a century ago, Franklin the American essay and autobiography, and Benjamin Rush medical literature. He shared in this work the early eminence of the city in medical science, an eminence still maintained and visible in great medical schools, with an aggregate attendance of some 4,000 students, and the College of Physicians, with the third largest medical library anywhere. This society itself, with its building, is but one of the various group devoted to science and its applications—the Academy of Natural Sciences, now not far from its centennial and possessing in its collections a great proportion of type-specimens, and the Franklin Institute, first of engineering societies. To these must be added, for history is also science and true science history, the Pennsylvania Historical Society, with an unrivaled collection of the early imprints and books of the Middle States.

For a generation, from 1682 to 1720, the city grew on the steep bank of the Delaware, dotted about with farms and hamlets; later Richmond, Kensington, Germantown and the farms to the west and on the "Neck," in its fertile and wooded fields. For seventy years, to the close of the Revolutionary era, with the death of Franklin in 1790, Philadelphia, in population, in trade, in position, in public influence, was the first city in the colonies, dependent or independent. It was in many senses the only "city." Its streets were paved—none others were. It had sidewalks. It had some street lamps—not many. It enjoyed the largest international trade. It was the monetary center. All the larger corporations, early land deals and speculative enterprises were launched here. It was the city to which the great bulk of emigration and the select emigrants came. Refugees from England, like Priesley; or from France, like Louis Philippe, Talleyrand or Joseph Bonaparte, sought the city, and a small but valued emigration came from

SECOND STREET, NORTH FROM MARKET

Court House and Christ Church on left. The Court House, in High (now Market) Street, was seat of Legislature before State House was built. Place for outdoor speaking. Gen. Whitefield addressed 6,000 persons here Hayti. It had grown excessively American. It already felt in its families, its life and its wealth, the pride of a century of successful achievement. When Franklin died there was no man living who could remember William Penn, and Franklin, while he might have met him, never did. When Willing said to Louis Philippe, seeking his daughter's hand: "Sir, as a poor immigrant, you are no match for her, and as king she would be no match for you,"—the ordered phrase spoke both an honest pride at home and an assured knowledge abroad, still characteristic of the city and its life, social, mercantile or manufacturing, for all three traffic with all the world, know the world and deem themselves the equal of anything in the world.

The city was near a great change a century ago. The yellow fever came and swept the town again and again, breaking its trade and dealing a blow to its prosperity, from which it did not recover for a generation. The West Indian trade was lost, and none came to take its place. Adverse political forces withdrew the charter of one bank of the United States, and, under Jackson, bankrupted another on which the credit and commercial standing of the city rested. The Hudson and Mohawk gave New York a waterway, extended by canal to the Great Lakes, in 1825, to the wheat-fields of Central New York and the West, and turned into the North River, and away from the "South River," the Delaware, the trade and migration of half the continent. New York began to outstrip Philadelphia; first, in population, 1820; next in wealth, and

ARCH STREET FERRY, IN 1800

Established under permission granted in 1766, connecting with Cooper's Point, New Jersey. The first stern-wheel steamboat on the Delaware, named "The Enterprise," and nicknamed the "Whorebarrow," ran on this line next in commercial, political and public importance. For forty years after the opening of the century, Philadelphia was losing ground at all points, and the presence of a great merchant and capitalist like Girard, of a great financier like Nicholas Biddle, or the keenest and ablest lawyers of the American bar and physicians in American medicine and surgery could not materially alter the law of the relative place of Philadelphia.

But this only deepened the American character and the foundation characteristics of a city founded by the peace-loving but thrifty and comfort-loving Quaker, William Penn—early watchful of education, as the William Penn Charter School still testifies, while the Germantown Academy witnesses to the next generation. The city was from its origin to the present day strong in all the arts of peace, in industry, in mechanical skill, in individual credit, in thrift, in integrity, in a high ideal of domestic comfort, in a firm faith in the separate home for the separate family—preferring slowly to develop a broad, diffused level of comfort than to heap great fortunes for the few and crumtenuate hives with the many. The first forty years of the last century, in which Philadelphia seemed to be losing headway, were the years which above all others made her stanch and American. The tide of new-comers flowed to New York, and Philadelphia became the one Northern city in which the native-born American was in an overwhelming majority. Since commerce was transferred to New York, manufactures grew, and the city grew to be beyond all others the place of varied industries, in which a wide range of wool and cotton fabrics, of leather goods, of iron and the lesser metals, of clothing, implements, hardware, rolling stock and ships, combined to base prosperity on so broad an average of demand that in no panic and depression has this great city seen all its manufactures arrested together. Moreover, as it grew, it began, a half century before New York and three-quarters of a century before London, to prohibit building on the back of a lot, to require a certain yardage, and, by a happy system of ground rent, and a fortunate legal decision, to make the building of small, cheap homes easy. It had, in 1902, on account of this and an open level site which permitted extension in all directions, 266,301 dwellings, or one to every family of five in its population of 1,203,597 in 1900. It was one result of this that savings flowed into building associations, which have to-day some $22,000,000 of loans and some 110,000 members. The general ownership of dwellings is nowhere more diffused, over two-fifths of the families owning the houses in which they live, and a still larger number renting one house and owning another, since a small house is the best form for savings. Moreover, it is the sure result of this diffusion of property, this separate housing and this widespread thrift that labor troubles are few, great and bitter strikes unknown, a varied employment and reliance on more than one industry the rule in almost every family. Based, too, on these conditions of peace, industry and thrift, able to work steadily and continuously, secure in a steady supply of labor, itself secure of steady wages, the individual enterprise tends steadily to grow and enlarge. Therefore, and by no accident, Philadelphia has the largest locomotive works, ship-building plant, carpet mills, leather factories, hat factory, engine builders, chemical works, asbestos factories, and in a score more fields this city leads all other cities in the scale of the single manufacturing company.

The first half of the nineteenth century, in which the foundation of this was laid, were years also in which much else was begun of later value. Secure in its position and enjoying in the Friends men by nature and by training full of philanthropy, this city led in its charities. The first hospital was early established and still stands on its original home, between Spruce and Pine streets, having added as much to its buildings in the last decade as in the previous century and a half. The first insane asylum followed, its offshoot. In prisons, Philadelphia saw first the solitary system. It opened the first House of Refuge. Its almshouse, when opened on the present site, was in advance of any other, and when present plans are completed and it is moved to a new one will remain so. In a wide field of care for the sick, the infirm, the aged and children, in its Blind Asylum and Institution for the Deaf and Dumb and in oral teaching for the last this city through all the past century steadily led the philanthropic advance. This amelioration of human evils and this generous discharge of social duty would never have come without the sound religious foundation early laid by the piety of Penn, the devotion which early built Christ Church and St. Peter's, the early organization of Presbyterianism—first powerful in Philadelphia—the administrative skill of Wesley and the efforts of Lutheran, Moravian and Reformed ministers. Nor must one forget that here the American negro first organized his own religious denomination for himself and worshipped in self-respect born of self-government. These multifarious origins are still reflected in nearly 500 churches and as many congregations, which network the entire city and play a most important part in its internal life.

BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF PHILADELPHIA FROM THE SCHUYLKILL TO THE DELAWARE, HALF A CENTURY AGO, IN 1853

This view, from a high point in West Philadelphia, represents the city as two miles wide from river to river and about two miles from North to South. The Site of the present Public Buildings was then four green squares. Two gas works had prominent places on the Schuylkill, which was still spanned by the old covered bridge at Market Street.

Exposition of 1876. The scene of the signing of the Declaration of Independence, Philadelphia, projected and carried out alone, repaying to the Federal Treasury all its appropriation, the first of the great displays in art and industry which have distinguished the past twenty-five years. No other has had equal fruits. It began the current art impulse in this country. It profoundly modified domestic architecture, introducing the Queen Anne cottage. It brought to the United States applied art, raising the entire level of our manufacture in metals, textiles, ceramics and all ornament in general. It left in Philadelphia the Pennsylvania Museum and School of Industrial Art, the one a growing collection, and the other the leading school in textile manufacture and applied art, generally in this country and one of the foremost institutions of its class and order anywhere. As always, in all cities, the Exposition was followed by a period of depression in reality and in business generally; but this was only for a season. Values all recovered, and the impulse the city received is not yet spent.

The terminal railroad facilities prepared for the Exposition and the railroad experience received in the handling of a great passenger business at a low rate and large profits inevitably developed the suburbs of the city. Fortunate in environs rising rapidly from the city and of a singular natural beauty, fortunate, too, in the extent to which the city area gave manufacturing sites, thus keeping factories in their own quarters, aided besides by a climate which gives an open air season of some nine months, between 1876 and 1901 the tide of luxurious life turned towards the suburbs. The palace built by Jay Cooke thirty years ago, to-day a great girls' school at Ogontz, was succeeded by others. There are at least a score of country places where ground and building have cost $500,000. There are half as many which represent as they stand in all their manifold furnishing $1,000,000. Two at least have picture galleries, on whose contents $200,000 have been expended. These great houses are after all but the conspicuous features of a great throng of suburban dwellings which cover a ring of twenty miles about Philadelphia. In this area have been planted two colleges of the Friends, Haverford and Swarthmore; two Catholic institutions for the education of the priesthood at Overbrook and Villa Nova, and the foremost women's college in the country at Bryn Mawr.

The suburban travel created by the facilities born of the Exposition reacted upon the early and inadequate terminals. The Pennsylvania between 1880 and 1890 bought its way into the heart of the city, entered on a viaduct and built one of the world's great passenger stations. The Reading, by a joint arrangement with the city, elevated its tracks and built another great depot on Market street, and the two between them established the center of the city. In close relation to these depots have grown the great department stores, first developed in Philadelphia, and doing a collective business of about $45,000,000 annually, and fast rehousing themselves.

The construction of the new railroad terminals was but part of the general replanning of Philadelphia in the period succeeding the Exposition. By it Fairmount Park was provided with its two spectacular buildings, Memorial Hall and Horticultural Hall, the latter the center of a growing display. The gorge of the Wissahickon, a singular survival of the mountain glen in a city ward, connected the park with the suburban drives of Chestnut Hill and beyond. The Zoological Gardens, with a site of great beauty, the development of the University, and the purchase of Bartram's Garden as a park began what will eventually be a Schuylkill "embankment." Midway the Export Exposition building was planned, the scene of the Republican National Convention in 1900. When the Almshouse is removed the entire region will be open to park treatment, and connecting parks and open spaces stretch for over ten miles along the Schuylkill. The Delaware meanwhile has been as steadily developed as the scene of ship-building, traffic, coal-handling and ocean steamship lines, the changes on its banks giving the prospect of commercial facilities matching any city. These and a growing trade have in their turn led to the erection of the Bourse Building and the creation of the Commercial Museum, unrivaled among such institutions and supported by the city.

When "Jayne's Hall" was put up, just before the Civil War, on Chestnut near Sixth, its low squat bulk was reputed the largest building in its cubic contents in the United States. The flat-fronted five-story building remained for twenty years the type of Philadelphia architecture. A decade after the first towering buildings in Chicago, the first building of the new steel construction appeared. In the past ten years they have transformed the center of the city, most of all at Broad and Chestnut streets. If no one of these equals the tallest of such structures elsewhere, their solid designs are a more successful handling of a difficult problem than has usually appeared.

These various changes in the building of the city and in its environs were accompanied by civic changes in its streets. Their central point at Broad and Market was filled by the great pile of public buildings—the City Hall. During the period in which it has been under construction the population of the city has nearly doubled, so that the city has gained as many inhabitants in the past thirty years as in the previous 100. The horse-car companies, which had earlier seized the streets and paid nothing for them, in the last twelve years have been transformed into electric traction and forced to pave the streets. Joined to the expenditure of the city, this has transformed Philadelphia from the worst to the best paved city in the country. Clean streets have become possible. A deep waterway has been secured to the sea, twenty-five feet now and soon thirty, replacing an earlier twenty at the shallows. The water front is in process of improvement. Two score small parks have been added to the single large one, Fairmount; 2800 acres laid out nearly forty years ago. School expenditures have been trebled in twenty years, the Central High School provided with a new building at a cost of $1,000,000; manual training schools added, and a girls' high-school course of three years extended to six years in high and normal schools, the last a new institution. The city and private bequests provide over 400 scholarships, furnish-

The State House yard or square was long a fashionable resort and favorite place for town and public meetings. Oct. 5, 1765, citizens met here to protest against the Stamp Act, and in Aug. 1768, to proclaim against obnoxious duties. Here, July 8, 1776, the Declaration of Independence was publicly read, and here in 1861 recruiting officers from various Pennsylvania Regiments pitched their tents.

LAUNCHING OF THE UNITED STATES BATTLESHIP "MAINE." AT GRAMP'S SHIPYARDS, JULY 27, 1898. Chaired by Miss Mary Peckle Alderson, a descendant of Com. Peckle, "Father of the American Navy." The last plate of the ship was launched on the 27th of July, 1898, the anniversary of the destruction of the old battleship "Maine" in Havana Harbor, when 266 officers and men were killed. The new battleship is of 18 knots speed, 16,000 horse power; 393 ft. 6½ inches over all; 73 ft. 2½ in. beam; 13,500 tons displacement. In the background is Perry's Island, where William Cump, founder of this great yard once built ships. At the left is the American Liner "New York," having new machinery put in; at the right the Clyde Liner "Atsapha" and the powerful floating derrick "Atlas."

WHOLESALE PRODUCE QUARTER, Dock Street, East of Third Street

Dealers in fruits and vegetables center about this locality. The street follows the line of Dock Creek, which was an open stream from the earliest times, until after the Revolution, when it was arched over and converted into a sewer.

DELAWARE AVENUE MARKET HOUSE, Delaware Avenue, Dock and Front Streets

Long before the Revolution space was reserved for market purposes. This building was erected in the middle of the last century. The wooden arch covering what Water Street was located a few years ago but was later removed.

ing free tuition in medicine, law, science, college and art studies to deserving pupils of the common schools, both boys and girls. The city debt has been steadily diminished, in spite of these great improvements. Still greater are before the city in filtration, new art gallery and library, the removal of the almshouse and repaving. New projects for the city's general development unceasingly come up for consideration by the city administration.

Private wealth and public munificence have made a leap forward not less great. The financial traditions of the Revolution were renewed when the great house of Drexel spread its connections and influence to the world; three great monetary centers, New York, London and Paris. The Bank of North America, chartered in 1781, and still continuing under its original charter, the first of banks with national relations, leads in age the two groups of banks which have furnished the nation's general banking institutions. They have been supplemented by a growing list of trust companies and savings banks. This growth has enlarged the capital, widened the enterprises and increased the activities of the city. The reorganization of the Reading, and the construction of its subway, partly at its expense, and partly at the expense of the city, both altered its relations to the development of the city, adding to the growth of its rural regions and removing from the business and financial relations of Philadelphia a hazard which had impeded its development through nearly twenty years. As a result the anthracite industry for the first time in a quarter of a century was placed on a settled basis under a definite arrangement between capital and labor which appears likely to eliminate the struggles of the past, each of which has always checked the industrial growth of the city. The growth of the suburban ring of the population due to this cause, the development of the Pennsylvania Railroad and the expansion of the trolley system brought on a congestion of passenger traffic in the center of the city which rendered necessary the construction of a subway in Market street. It is expected that this will be completed in two years, and that it will shorten the time taken in reaching the outskirts of the city nearly one-half. With this change there came a sudden advance in two great industries. Ship-building was greatly increased and the steamship traffic of the city has yearly enlarged for five years past. The pressure of population upon the center of the city has led to the building of the skyscraper, and a city which up to a few years ago had few great structures in its center has seen erected one great building after another with plans for many aerial piles in process of completion. This has been accompanied by a growth more rapid than in any other period of the past of small houses in the suburbs. Their construction sprang as a natural result from an expansion in manufacture and trade which has doubled the number of persons

PRINCE HENRY, BROTHER OF EMPEROR WILLIAM OF GERMANY, after the launching of the Emperor's yacht "Meteor," visits Philadelphia March 10, 1902

Prince Henry, during his two weeks' visit to America, to represent the German Nation, visited Philadelphia. Met at the Pennsylvania station by Mayor Ashbridge, he was escorted to City Hall, where the freedom of the city was conferred upon him. Under escort of the First Troop City Cavalry, he visited Independence Hall and Cramp's Shipyard, and was entertained by the Union League

THE LAND TITLE BUILDING—THE LAND TITLE AND TRUST CO., Broad Street, west side, from Chestnut to Sansom Streets.

Nothing better typifies the modern development of Philadelphia than the lofty and handsome 22-story Land Title Building, an ideal office structure, erected in 1902.

The Land Title & Trust Co., William R. Nicholson, President, has gross assets of about $6,000,000, a capital of $2,000,000 and surplus $1,000,000.

employed during the past ten years in the greater enterprises of the city like Baldwin's Locomotive Works, Gramp's Shipyards, Wanamaker's, Strawbridge & Clothier's, an advance which has not been less conspicuous in other manufacturing and department stores. The University of Pennsylvania has been moved to a new site, provided with some thirty new buildings—among them a new museum, hospital and observatory—and raise to the first rank in the number of its students. The Drexel Institute, just now increasing its size, is another great foundation furnishing technical and art training. Girard College, founded three-score years ago with an endowment of some $15,000,000, has been improved, enlarged and quickened in all its work, advancing more in the last ten or fifteen years than in all before. The Williamson Trade School is another great foundation for the instruction of boys. The art schools of the city have in all 4,500 pupils, doubled in twenty years. Its increase in the appliances of industrial training has been matched by an advance and clarity of the city. Its noted hospitals have increased in number and in size, and special institutions for the epileptic and consumptive and other specific maladies have been established. The work of relief has been improved and the work of its organization. A truant act and schools for defective children have dealt with the children who did not attend school. The House of Refuge, the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind Asylum have all been furnished with new homes in the country in the past decade, private liberally supplementing endowed funds. Hospitals have grown up all over the city, the growth of beds far outstripping population. A tenth of the reality of the city is to-day devoted to education, hospitals and churches, without reckoning endowment. No city makes a more liberal title. There has been apparent at all points in a multitude of minor details, not only an increase in the contributions of benevolence, but in the skill of those who administer the manifold aid of the city in all its various forms—public, private and individual.

At the present time scores of notable new structures, besides those already referred to, are being erected in all sections of the city and suburbs. The Widener Training School for Crippled Children is a most worthy addition to great educational institutions. New office buildings, such as the Arcade, the Commonwealth Trust, the Mutual Life, the Land Title, the Foerderer, the Pennsylvania and others are now under way. Several grand hotels are also in process of erection, one to replace the Stratford and the peer of any hotel in the world; another to replace the Young Men's Christian Association building; and still another completed in 1902, by John Stanford, to be at the corner of Walnut and Thirteenth streets. Several gigantic department stores, Wanamaker's, Snellenburg's, and Gimbel's, are being erected. Apartment houses with all the modern luxuries are springing up all over the city. Many new factories and many extensive additions to those already existing are noticeable everywhere. In a general way the city has never shown more healthy development than at the beginning of the Twentieth Century.

This splendid and symmetrical growth has now gone on for over two centuries. Evil there is, has been and will long exist. Blots there are, bitterly to deplore. But if one watch and regard the deeper course of this majestic current which from small beginnings has flowed to this great city, there is in it limitless encouragement. Wealth has increased and population; but neither content nor comfort, education, the security, health and happiness of the family.

♦ ♦ ♦ THE MOST AMERICAN OF ALL CITIES ♦ ♦ ♦

THE PUBLIC BUILDINGS OR CITY HALL, Intersection of Broad and Market Streets, in the former Penn Square
 Largest and most costly municipal building in America. Has cost $23,000,000. $1,000,000 still needed to complete it. Covers 4½ acres, and has 634 rooms. The tower, surmounted by Penn Statue, is 547 feet high. Clock-dials are 20 feet in diameter. Penn statue is 37 feet high. Begun in 1871; corner stone laid 1874; first occupied 1881. Houses city and county offices, County Courts and State, Superior and Supreme Courts. The Penn Statue was photographed while on street floor before being raised to its lofty pedestal.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD STATION, Broad and Market Streets, opposite the Public Buildings.

Magnificent Gothic railroad station, ideally appointed. A superb terminus for the "Standard Railroad of America." To reach the centre of the city the company bought many acres of costly ground and built an elevated road of masonry a mile long. Opened Dec. 5, 1891. Reconstructed and vastly enlarged 1893. Main building 306 feet on Broad St. and 212 feet on Market. Train house 707 feet long.

CLOCK ON PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD STATION, Broad, N. W. Cor. Market Sts. A beautiful work of art executed in terra cotta by Karl Bitter. It is illuminated at night, and, considering its artistic features and the number of people who look at it daily, is one of the most important timepieces in the city.

RELIEFS ON PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD STATION, Broad, N. W. Cor. Broad Street. The station is elaborately adorned with terra cotta statuary, by Bitter, including the vignettes, representing the great titles of the country; the magnificent "Progress of Transportation," in the waiting room; the panel "Progress," over the 15th Street Arch, and the fine figure pieces adorning the pediments.

READING TERMINAL—PHILADELPHIA & READING RAILWAY STATION, Market and Twelfth Streets

One of the world's greatest railroad stations, at the heart of a great metropolis, on its chief wholesale thoroughfare. The main building is 266 feet on Market street and 107 on Twelfth street. Eight stories high, of New England granite, white terra cotta and pink tinted brick. Train shed is 266 feet wide, 507 feet long. Span covers 16 tracks. Part of the ground floor is a great public market

THE LOADING TERMINALS AT PHILADELPHIA OF THE "PHILADELPHIA TRANS-ATLANTIC LINE" STEAMERS.—CHAS. M. TAYLOR'S SONS, MANAGERS. Port Richmond Elevator, capacity 1,500,000 bushels. William Street Station, capacity 15,000 tons. Seaboard terminus of Philadelphia & Reading Railway. Philadelphia Trans-Atlantic Line has weekly service of cargo steamships. The Port Richmond elevators and wharves form one of the greatest export terminals in the world for the shipment of coal, iron, grain, heavy machinery, etc.

DELAWARE AVENUE, Looking North from Chestnut Street

This thoroughfare runs along the river front in the main part of the city. Here are the chief ferries to Camden and the piers and wharves of the various shipping lines. Here, too, are the Philadelphia terminals of the Atlantic City and South Jersey railroads. The business houses are largely identified with the city's commerce. On South Delaware Avenue are sugar refineries and other manufactures

THE NEW STOCK EXCHANGE, formerly the Mechanics' Exchange, Dock, Walnut and Third Streets. Shows the classic architectural features in its exterior construction. Designed by William Strickland. Opened 1854 and has since been a landmark. Formerly the Stock Exchange and the Maritime Exchange. To be modernized and become again the Stock Exchange. At the right is the Great Railroad Bank.

THE CUSTOM HOUSE AND THE STOCK EXCHANGE, Chestnut Street, Westward from Fourth Street. This view of the financial district shows on the left the R. D. Wood Building, Western National Bank, Custom House, Stock Exchange, Independence National Bank and Public Ledger. On the right Federal City, First City, Philadelphia National Bank, Citizens of Philadelphia National Bank, etc.

THE PHILADELPHIA BOURSE, Fourth and Fifth Streets, between Market and Chestnut Streets. Only institution of its kind in America. Modelled after the great Bourse of Europe. It is the centralization of Philadelphia's powerful commercial associations. Its object is to facilitate and encourage and save time and money in the exchange of securities. Building and site cost about $200,000. Opened 1895.

NATIONAL EXPORT EXPOSITION BUILDINGS, KNOWN ALSO AS THE REPUBLICAN NATIONAL CONVENTION HALL, WEST END OF SOUTH STREET BRIDGE
Contains largest assembly room in this city. National Export Exposition was held here in 1876 and President McKinley was renominated in 1900. Will be the future home of the Commercial Museum

MASTER BUILDERS EXCHANGE, 18-24 South Seventh Street
Permanent free exhibition of everything used in building. Association of all trades identified with building industry. A very useful institution and convenient place of meeting for contractors

FRANKLIN INSTITUTE, Seventh Street, between Market and Chestnut
Founded that to promote mechanic arts. Same year held the first exhibition of American manufactures. Awards medals. Publishes scientific reports. Lectures and classes in mechanics and drawing

PHILADELPHIA COMMERCIAL MUSEUMS, Fourth Street, between Walnut
Collects and disseminates data of value to the national export trade. Extensive classified museum of natural products of the world. Will later occupy National Export Exposition Building

REAL ESTATE TRUST COMPANY, Chestnut, Southeast Corner Broad Street
A great edifice is in its new grand and imposing seventeen-story edifice. Chartered 1884.

THE STAUNCHEST CITY IN AMERICA

Philadelphia, the third in area, and the ninth in population in the world, is the staunchest city in America. Its founders, the Quakers, gave it that character, and although the Society of Friends is no longer a conspicuous element, the city continues to be the strongest in financial and commercial standing. This quality of staunchness, integrity, and even thrift has at times been designated as ultraconservatism. The history of Philadelphia is one continuous story of more than two centuries of progress.

Perhaps no city in the New World has been the scene of so many important historical events connected with the forming of the new nation. For over a century it was the metropolis of the country, the first in literature, science, the arts, with an unchallenged commercial supremacy. It has been a shipbuilding community since it was first settled, and extensive locomotive building is coveal with the operation of railroads.

Philadelphia was begun first. It was laid out under William Penn's direction, in checkerboard fashion, with five plots for public squares, for Penn wanted to found a green country town. The proprietor himself came over to superintend its building and to govern his Province with wisdom and justice. Pennsylvania was the best governed province in the colonies, and Philadelphia the best governed and most enterprising city.

The city's progress during its first century, owing to the slender opportunity for comparisons, seems much greater than since, when fifty cities in the Union are contending for recognition. On the ship that brought Penn to Philadelphia in 1682 was a printing press, the first in the colonies, although Jamestown was founded in 1607, Plymouth in 1620 and New York colonized in 1623. Within a few years the first paper mill in the New World was established in Philadelphia; in half a century the first type foundry; a soon afterward the first Bible; the first insurance company; the first bank; the first medical school, etc. The list is entirely too long to enumerate, and it can be matched by no other city in the country.

In national history the City of Brotherly Love has played an important part. Many of the great movements that led to the Revolution started here. The first Continental Congress assembled here, the Declaration of Independence was adopted and signed here, the Articles of Confederation, under which the country was so marvelously governed for a dozen years, and finally the National Government. The first man-of-war for the first navy of the new nation was built here, and here was made the first American flag with five pointed stars and alternating bars.

Until the war of 1812 Philadelphia's commerce was supreme, just as to-day its industrial supremacy is undoubted. The opening of the Erie Canal interrupted its commerce, but this has been gradually returning. As a City of Homes it is unrivaled by any large city in the world, and it is the metropolis of one of the solidest States of the Union; and unqualifiably one of the few pre-eminent cities of the world.

PENNSYLVANIA INSTITUTION FOR THE INSTRUCTION OF THE BLIND, Overbrook

Exceptionally picturesque structures. Institution founded 1833. Occupied building at 20th and Race Streets 65 years. The blind—mainly State supported—are taught English branches and various industries. Probably the oldest blind institution in this country. It aims to make the pupils self-supporting. It is said to have trained more professional teachers of the blind than any other institution in the United States.

BELMONT CRICKET CLUB'S GROUNDS, 49th Street Station, Pennsylvania Railroad

Philadelphia has long been known as the home of cricket in the United States, and whatever favor the English game has had in this country has been due to its enthusiasts. In 1840 the oldest club was organized here, and now there are no less than a dozen clubs, the "Philadelphia," "Germantown," "Manheim," "Merion," etc. There is a yearly International Match. Belmont Club was organized 1872.

NAVAL PARADE, NATIONAL ENCAMPMENT OF GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC, 1899, on the Delaware River

A panoramic and thrilling feature of the National Encampment of the G. A. R. in September, 1899, was the naval parade and review. The battleships Indiana, Massachusetts and Texas and the cruisers New York and Brooklyn, commanded by Admiral Sampson, anchored in the Delaware in front of the city, and on September 8 a long line of gaily-decked river craft sailed around the squadron.

UNITED STATES ARSENAL, (Frankford), Tacony Road and Bridge Street.
This great establishment for the manufacture of arms occupies a beautiful park-like tract of 655 acres, fronting on Frankford Creek close to the Delaware River.

UNITED STATES NAVAL HOME, 'Grap', Poppy Road, Corner of Balchinger Street.
One of the homes for old navy pensioners supported by the Federal Government. The grounds were purchased 1840 and buildings occupied 1841. U. S. Naval Academy occupied part of the building until 1846 when it was removed to Annapolis. U. S. Naval Hospital is on the grounds.

 LEAGUE ISLAND NAVY YARD OF THE UNITED STATES, Southern terminus of Broad Street, five miles south of the City Hall
 Comprises 923 acres, given to National Government by City in 1876. Great concrete dock, to accommodate largest ships afloat, now under construction. Among ships in yard in 1900 are Monitor Miantonomah, Battleship Indiana, Cruisers Minneapolis and Columbia. The whole island is being developed for the highest grade naval station. The grounds are laid out picturesquely.

GRAIN WHARVES OF THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD CO., on the Delaware River at foot of Washington Street, operated by the Girard Point Storage Co.
 This elevator is of brick and fireproof, and has a capacity of 450,000 bushels. It is in close proximity to the piers of the ocean steamship lines—American, Red Star and Atlantic Transport. In the background appear adjacent sugar refineries. The Girard Point Storage Co.'s elevators at Girard Point are illustrated above.

GIRARD POINT STORAGE CO.'S GRAIN ELEVATORS, Girard Point, on the Schuylkill River, just above its junction with the Delaware
 This company, organized 1881, with capital of $2,000,000 is in fact a Pennsylvania Railroad adjunct for which Girard Point is an important freight terminal. The two grain elevators have a capacity of 2,050,000 bushels and the four wharves, or piers, accommodate all classes of merchandise. The depth of water and dockage alongside are ample for the largest ocean steamers.

FAIRMOUNT WATER WORKS, ALONG THE SCHUYLKILL RIVER

Oldest of four pumping stations in Fairmount Park. Turbines, started December 25, 1822, furnish the power, but, with the completion of filtration system, will probably go out of service. Formerly one of the city's sights. Main buildings designed by Frederick Graff, to whom a monument has been erected on the grounds

MANAYUNK, ON THE SCHUYLKILL RIVER

An old town, now a northwestern part of the city. An important manufacturing district. Water power, furnished by the Schuylkill Canal, has long been used to run numerous textile and paper mills. Many of the streets so steep that horses cannot use them. Sidewalks are flights of steps

SCHUYLKILL RIVER, FROM SOUTH STREET BRIDGE LOOKING NORTHWARD

The stretch of water here seen marks the head of navigation for masted vessels, the bridges above having no draw spans. Lumber, coal, ice and stone yards abound on the west bank. East side skirted by Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. Philadelphia, Wilmington & Baltimore Railroad on the west bank

THE SCHUYLKILL RIVER, WITH ITS EIGHTEEN BRIDGES

Looking southward in the view are seen the Market, Chestnut, Walnut and South street bridges, a few of the many links connecting West Philadelphia with the main part of the city. In the picture are seen the extensive West Philadelphia Market, the Baltimore & Ohio Station and the Allison Car Works

THE BALDWIN LOCOMOTIVE WORKS—BURNHAM, WILLIAMS & CO.—Broad and Spring Garden Streets and Reading Railway Subway
Builds all varieties of locomotives for all countries. Established 1831. "Oil Ironides" built 1832. Annual capacity 1,200 locomotives. Employs 8,500 men. Runs night and day. Has built 20,000 locomotives. Area 16 acres of valuable city property. Largest works of its kind in the world. The New United States Mint and New Boys' High School are close by

ATLANTIC OIL REFINING COMPANY'S PLANT AND POINT BREEZE GAS WORKS, Schuylkill terminus of Passunk Avenue
In addition to being one of the most picturesque quarters of the Quaker City, Point Breeze is notable as the site of the Atlantic Refining Company's plant, whence is shipped nearly one-half of the world's illuminating fluid, and the Point Breeze Gas Works. The latter plant was completed in 1854, when it was then considered the largest in the world

SUGAR REFINERIES IN PHILADELPHIA ALONG THE DELAWARE RIVER

No view of the Delaware River front of Philadelphia is so familiar as the huge group of brick sugar refineries, which picturesquely break up the sky line. The refineries, chiefly operated by the American Sugar Refining Co., are those of Harrison, Frazier & Co., E. C. Knight & Co., Claus Spreckels and W. J. McCahan. The Harrisons, formerly in this industry, are to erect a great new refinery

THE BALDWIN LOCOMOTIVE WORKS. Founded by M. W. Baldwin, now Barnham, Williams & Co. Showing new buildings erected in 1901. Spring Garden and 16th Streets. Almost simultaneously with the completion of the new United States Mint, the finest structure of its kind extant, the Baldwin Locomotive Works completed its 1901 additions, making these famous works not only the largest but the most modern in the world, and increasing the capacity to 1,500 locomotives a year. In 1902, was celebrated the 70th year since the building of "Old Ironsides."

JOHN B. STETSON COMPANY. HAT MANUFACTORY, Montgomery Avenue, 4th and Cadwallader Streets

Largest and most complete felt hat factory in the world, solely fine soft and stiff felt hats. Started 1865 by John B. Stetson, and incorporated 1891. Capital, $1,000,000. The plant covers about 10 acres of floor space and employs 2,200 persons. Yearly product, about 85,000 dozen hats, sold all over the world. The company maintains hospital, dispensary, reading-room, etc., for its employees

THE SHARPLESS DYEWOOD EXTRACT COMPANY. Dyewoods and dyewood extracts. Manufactory at Chester, on the Delaware. Offices 648 Philadelphia Bourse

This business was established in 1855 and incorporated in 1895. Manufacture dyewoods and dyewood extracts for use by cotton, woolen, silk and morocco manufacturers. Besides selling to the trade throughout this country their products are largely exported. The officers are: Thomas Scattergood, president; John W. Pepper, vice-president, and George S. Hutton, secretary and treasurer

CROFT & ALLEN COMPANY'S Cheesecake, Cream and Confectionery Works, 33d and Market Streets. This fine group of buildings is situated on the corner of the city's largest street, extending from Market Street to Woodland Avenue. It produces the famous Croft's brand Milk Cream, etc. Samuel Croft, president.

WOLFF PROCESS LEATHER COMPANY, Summerville Station, Philadelphia & Reading R. R. One of the greatest and best leather factories in the world, and the largest for producing the "Wolff" brand of leather, patented by George S. Wolff, founder and president of the company. South Rittenhouse Square

RITTENHOUSE SQUARE, as seen from the southwest corner. One of five squares laid out by William Penn Brides Centre Square, now covered by the City Hall, the founder provided a square in each of the four quarters of his city, marking the corners of a great rectangle. Rittenhouse, the southwestern, is the centre of the city's most fashionable and exclusive residence section. Washington Square was the Potter's Field until 1795, and contained the bodies of 2,000 soldiers. Franklin Square (northeastern) formerly had a well-marked Indian burial mound. Logan Square (northwest) was the scene of the great Sanitary Commission Fair, in 1864, and may become part of a projected grand boulevard to the Park.

South Laurel Hill Cemetery

North Terrace

Cedar of Lebanon in North Laurel Hill

LAUREL HILL CEMETERY, PHILADELPHIA'S PRE-EMINENT NECROPOLIS, Eastern bank of the Schuylkill, between East (Fairmount) Park and Wissahickon Park. The cemetery, in its 100 acres, has three parts: North, the original part, the Sims estate, "The Laurels"; South, the Rawle estate, "Harleigh"; Central, the George Pepper estate, "Fairy Hill." North and South Laurel Hill are bisected by Nicetown Lane, over which is a triple arched ornate stone bridge. Founded in 1855, it is the oldest, excepting Mt. Auburn, and the peer of any American rural cemetery. All that yet wealth with an unlimited drawing on the greatest talent can do has been done here to make this a paradisaical city of the cherished dead. Here are many miles of tombs, vaults, monuments, etc., that have cost incalculable millions, and here have been interred innumerable eminent men and women. The interments are about 50,000. Its chief founders were Frederick Brown, John Jay Smith, and ex-Mayor Benj. Woods Richards, whose son of same name has been identified with the cemetery since 1865, and is now a director, secretary and treasurer.
